HITHERTO comparatively few details in connection with the Anna outrage have been published. A memorial from the high officials of Fobkien in the Peking Gazette of the 21st ultimo, contains full particulars, as related by the Chinese, of the affair. According to this document the former crew of the Anna left her at Amov in September last, and three natives of Foochow, Yang Sr-sr, Wend CHENG-MEI, and YANG K'I-SIN, were engaged the former as headman, at a cheap rate of wages. Cho Li and Ch'en Achu, two Chinese, were already employed on board, and subsequently three more men, named Ch'EN ner in order to exact obedience. This was vessel left. Such is account given of the crime, which is no be similarly overcome; and, we may add, that doubt substantially correct.

YANG SI-SI was evidently the ringleader of the mutiny, and from the out-set seems to have been a dangerous character. After the murder of the captain and mate, he assumed the command, and on the 23rd September, steered the ressel for Pibseang Island, where she was brought to ancher. Two hundred-and fifteen baskets of sugar were lauded in fishing boats. The crow went off in different directions, whilst CHOR LI and CHEN ACHU took passage in a fishing junk to Amoy/ where they gave information to the authorities. The cargo was washed out of the vessel and lost, a portion of it being, however, picked up and sold by the fishermen. The two men left behind at the sheds went off after a time, as YANG SI-SI did not return. The fishermen, on their suspicious being aroused, reported the matter at the vamen of Pib-seang, and the sugar was delivered to the Magistrate of the district. CLAYM FOR DEFICIENT DELIVERY OF CARGO. SEE YOW v. F. MOORE, $144.—Mr. Breretou as for the plaintiff, and Mr. Johnson for the Mr. Brereton said this was an action brought stance called fungus, shipped at Sydney in the steamship Mikado, of which the defendant is simply dried mushrooms, and when dried repack it in large canvas cases, about two preter. no substance capable of being better stowed or desirability of referring the case, but no agreeless likely to perish from any inherent defect. ment could be come to and the evidence was wet on the top, water having evidently been Court rose, and the case was adjourned. allowed to come in through the air pipes. However, they took delivery of them, and were then shown a lot of fungua lying loose in the hold and took as much of that as they could get, and found by weighing that it amounted to not onite the contents of two bales. That made twenty-one bales and the plaintiff now sued the captain for the value of the remaining three. The bill of lading was in very simple form. It stated that the bales were received on board in good condition. tyrants rather than slaves, and the demands made by the weaker are growing almost as excessive as have been in foretime the requirements enforced by the stronger. But, with all this, the nature which some call womanly, and others spaniel-like, still exists among us. Heaven be praised !- and we have vet left to us a few low-voiced. gentle, tender-hearted women who find their highest joy in self-suppression and affection, in giving up their own desires for the good of others, and devoting themselves to the service of those they love.

-Punch.

Neither rancour nor revenge enters into the soul of her whom her deriders call aapaniel, her admirers womanly. Even where she has been ill-treated she can forgive; and the divine precept of seventy-times-seven seems to her a law of loveliness by which greater things are to be attained than the childish pleasure of manifesting "a high spirit" and a determination " not to be put She asks for nothing beyond the leave to love, the privilege to bless; and they who are most sorrowful are those who lie nearest to her heart, and for whom her soul goes out-with tenderest-yearning. To her thejoy of life is found rather in loving and worshipping than in being loved and worshipped: and were she able to choose, the would prefer to lie in the shadow of her husband's greatuess rather than that he should be overshadowed by her own. What gifts and ginces belong to her she uses as flowers in her chaplet with which she crowns her beloved: and for his sake rather than her own rejoines in her beauty, her wit, her acquirements, her intellect, as making his life the richer because here is the lovelier. It troubles comes upon them, she is brave that he may not be saddened: if troubles comes between them, she bears ber share in silence; and even when ill-usage rouses her to dignity, self-protection, and defence, it never rouses ber to resentment or retaliation. To the offer of repentance she answers back with forgiveness; and only repeated failures can convince her that her trust has been misplaced, that her tenderness is misunderstood. and that, if she would be true to herself and her ideal, she must abandon all hope of influencing to better things that terrible failure—the real. And this is the hardest kind to learn; the bitterest chapter of that whole tear-stained book of experience in the old story of the pitcher and the well over again. After repeated journeyings the day of final destruction comes; and the poor tool who trusted to the indestructibility even of Christian forbearance, womanly allowance, gets for his reward a handful of clay frag-
